Your CV's Title
and the subtitle

The Rubric's Title

A Key
- This is an entry with a key. The key is displayed on the left, and you're reading the entry's contents. As you can see, this entry does not belong to a subrubric.

A First Subrubric
and the sequel

A Key
- This entry belongs to the first subrubric. Before the subrubric, some space is added to separate it from the previous entry.
- After the subrubric, some space is also added to separate it from the first entry. Note that this entry has no key. The entries contents are aligned together.

Another Key
- This is another entry with a new key.
- This is another entry, but this one has no key. Note the text bullet which serves as a visual clue, especially when several entries share the same key.

A Second Subrubric

A Key
- This entry belongs to the second subrubric.
- This one also belongs to the second subrubric.

Another Key
- This is another entry with a new key.
- This is another entry, but this one has no key.

A Key
- If you want to separate some entries from the subrubric above, you can for instance make an empty subrubric.
- You can include other rubrics below. Rubrics can even be split across pages. The titles will then be repeated.
